SHOALS BILL UNSIGNED AND BRINGS DOUBT

Although President Believes He Has Killed Measure By "Pocket Veto"

WASHINGTON, June 8.—The Muscle Shoals bill held doubtful status today through failure of President Coolidge to attach his signature to the measure by last midnight.

It was authoritatively stated the President believed he had killed the measure by "pocket veto."

Senator Norris of Nebraska, leading proponent of the bill, maintained on the other hand that it had become law. He plans to make a test, by the inserting appropriations for conduct of the work in an appropriation bill next session. This would throw the matter into the courts if the government contests his action.

The measure, designed to have the government manufacture nitrates, develop and sell power, and produce fertilizer for experiment at its wartime plant in Alabama, was passed by Congress a few days before the end of the recent session.

Ten days, excepting Sunday, followed without the President either signing or vetoing the measure. The ten days expired last midnight.

Poes of the bill and persons close to the President maintained his failure to act during this period constituted a "pocket veto" of the legislation. They based their argument on the U. S. Constitution, which reads:

"If any bill shall NOT be returned by the President within ten days after it has been presented to him, the same shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless Congress by their adjournment prevent its return; in which case it shall NOT BE A LAW."

Norris contends that the end of this session did not constitute adjournment in the meaning but is only a recess. Therefore, he said, the President's "failure to sign" made the measure a law automatically, just as if the ten days had elapsed at any time while Congress was sitting.

EXPECTED TO LAND TODAY; CROWD READY

While Race Across Atlantic In Planes Of Two Men Is Held Up Again

BULLETIN
At 2 A. M. Australian time (8 A. M. Pacific Coast time) the Southern Cross was 553 miles from Brisbane.

SYDNEY, Australia, June 9.—Capt. Charles Kingsford-Smith's airplane Southern Cross was expected to land at Brisbane at 3 P. M. (EST) Friday. Messages from the plane reported that all was well.

Radio station 2FC at Sydney will broadcast throughout the world on a 25.5 metre wavelength the landing and reception of the Southern Cross.

ST. JOHN'S N. F., June 8.—The slender advantage Miss Amelia Earhart and the crew of the airplane Friendship had in their race for a trans-Atlantic airplane crossing, seemed destroyed today.

Although their competitor, Miss Mabel Bolling and the crew of the monoplane Columbia were still at Curtis Field, L. I., while the Friendship bobs on the waters of Trespass Bay, the Friendship has shown several defects.

Two oil tanks this morning were reported leaking on the big Fokker plane while it was said one pontoon also had developed a leak. It was questionable whether they would be repaired in time for a take-off this morning.

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif., June 8.—The worst weather of its entire flight from Oakland airport was encountered by the airplane Southern Cross today, between Fiji Islands and Australia.

Torrential rains and a "bumpy" atmosphere that caused the plane to drop 400 feet on several occasions were reported in messages relayed from the Southern Cross to the Navy radio here.

"We did not want to worry anyone while we were in it but now we are out of it," the message said, "we will tell you that for the last two hours we have been battling the worst weather of the whole flight."

"At 7,500 to 8,000 feet altitude we experienced exceptionally heavy rain and bumps gave us drops of over 400 feet at a time. In general we are fighting a series of mean tricks by the elements on this last stage."

"Smithy (Capt. Charles Kingsford-Smith) and I are not through but as soon as the moon comes up and the blind flying ends for the night we will eat and have a shot of our emergency rations of whiskey."

"It is cold and we have no gloves but all are well."

The message was signed "Ulm" (T. P. Ulm, the relief pilot).

The plane's position at the time of sending the message was given as 6:17 p. m. (Sydney time) or about nine hours out from Naselai Beach in the Fiji Islands, where the plane took off at 2:35 (Fiji time).

Another message from the plane received by the Navy radio here at 12:45 a. m. (Pacific Coast time) said the Southern Cross was approximately 500 miles out from Suva.

"Bad weather, rain, wet," the message said.

Previously a dispatch from Sydney timed 5:15 p. m. (Sydney time) said the plane was flying through rain at an altitude of 5,000 feet.

ROOSEVELT FIELD, L. I., June 8.—The plan of Miss Mabel Boll to be the first woman to fly across the Atlantic, retarded yesterday when the monoplane Columbia was forced to turn back to Roosevelt Field because of fog, faced another setback today.

Miss Boll and her two pilots Oliver C. Leboutillier and Arthur Argles, had planned to start northward again today probably for Old Orchard, Me., from where the trans-Atlantic start would be made.

Lieutenant Henry B. Clark, commandant of Roosevelt Field, said he would not permit the Columbia to leave Roosevelt Field today under any circumstances. Roosevelt Field has the only runway sufficiently long for a heavily loaded plane to get away.

—IT'S LEGAL, MEN—

NEW YORK.—Magistrate F. J. Kroehl ruled it was legal for a man to kiss his sweetheart in a motion picture show when Dennis McCormack brought a complaint against Albert Reynolds, usher, who tried to evict McCormack just after the latter kissed his girl companion.

—HAPPY NOW—

Pacific Flyers Poise For Last Hop

When the city of Brisbane, Australia, rolls up on the horizon before Capt. Kingsford-Smith and his three comrades, aviation's most hazardous epic will have been written. Above is a map which shows the course the Southern Cross will take upon leaving Suva, with a section of the thriving metropolis which constitutes her goal; below the four gallant airmen, Lyons, Kingsford-Smith, Ulm and Warner, who will live in history as the first men to achieve a trans-Pacific crossing.

EAGLES TO HOLD MEMORIAL RITES SUNDAY MORNING

To Pay Homage To Members Of Fraternal Order Who Have Passed On

The Circleville Aerie No. 685 F. O. E., will hold its annual Memorial service, Sunday, June 10th at 9 a. m.

Hon. J. M. Weade of Washington C. H., Ohio, will deliver the address. All members are urged to be at the Lodge room promptly at 9 a. m.

The Fraternal Order of Eagles contracts with the member not only to aid him financially in sickness, but to see that he is given an honorable burial when he dies. If he has a family interested in his welfare, the funeral benefit is paid to them. If he is alone in the world the Aerie takes charge of the body and performs those last rites.

Once a year, most Aerics have a Memorial Day in which the members that have died are invoked by name in a reverent memorial service, attended by all the friends and relatives of the deceased.

SERIOUSLY HURT IN AUTO MISHAP

Walton Reichelderfer was painfully and perhaps seriously injured Friday noon in an automobile accident in which he was thrown completely through the windshield, onto the cement pavement with a terrific impact, according to spectators.

The accident occurred at the corner of Main and Washington sts. when Tom Strawser of the City Fire Department driving north on Washington-st. and Walton going east on Main-st. in a truck crashed as Strawser turned east on Main.

Young Reichelderfer hit the pavement on his hip, and altho he stood up and walked a few steps, it is feared his hip or pelvic bone may be fractured. He was taken into the Columbus Oil Co. filling station, and Dr. Howard Jones was called who dressed several small cuts, and administered an anesthetic until a further examination can be made.

The injured boy, better known as "Red" Reichelderfer is the 18 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. N. E. Reichelderfer of Park Place.

Slogan Contest To Close On Saturday; Interest Is Growing

The Merchants' Slogan contest closes Saturday night at midnight. The answers are coming in fast on the last day but there is still time for you to get busy and send in your.

Don't just think that the first ones in will get the prize money. They may be all wrong on a few names and that will put them clear out of the running.

It is better to take a little more time and be sure than to make haste.

Just think what you can do with the $25. It won't take you to the Convention at Kansas City, or it won't take you to Europe, but it will buy over 130 gallons of gasoline for your car, will buy several new tires, if you have a Ford, will buy that new spring dress and hat and many other things that you can use.

Get busy tonight, fill out the answers and mail or bring them to THE HERALD office. Just so they are mailed before mid-night Saturday, but the sooner the better.

Death came quietly, Thursday morning at 7 o'clock to Mrs. Elizabeth Waddle Renick, widow of Alexander M. Renick, at her home, 65 E. Fourth-st., Chillicothe, after a two weeks' illness due to uraemic poisoning, following an operation in Grant Hospital, Columbus, on May 26th. Mrs. Renick was removed to her home here, Wednesday evening.

Mrs. Renick was one of nature's gentlewomen, kindly cultured and belonged to one of the oldest families in Chillicothe. She was greatly loved and respected by all with whom she came in contact and her passing will be sincerely mourned by many close friends and by her family.

She was born in Chillicothe on Sept. 23rd, 1848, the daughter of the late Dr. William Waddle and Jane McCoy Waddle. She received her early education in the local schools, later attending Miss Brice's School, in New Haven, Connecticut. She was united in marriage to Alexander M. Renick on December 28th, 1874, who passed away March 1st, 1923.

Mrs. Renick is survived by one son, Alexander Mortimer Renick, and two grandsons, Charles M. Renick and Ralph O. Renick of this city, three sisters and two brothers, Miss Eleanor R. Friends are asked kindly to omit flowers.—Scioto Gazette.

EXPECTED TO LAND TODAY; CROWD READY

While Race Across Atlantic In Planes Of Two Men Is Held Up Again

BULLETIN

At 2 A. M. Australian time (8 A. M. Pacific Coast time) the Southern Cross was 555 miles from Brisbane.

SYDNEY, Australia, June 9.—Capt. Charles Kingsford-Smith's airplane Southern Cross was expected to land at Brisbane at 3 P. M. (EST) Friday. Messages from the plane reported that all was well.

Radio station 2FC at Sydney will broadcast throughout the world on a 28.5 metre wavelength the landing and reception of the Southern Cross.

ST. JOHN'S N. F., June 8.—The slender advantage Miss Amelia Earhart and the crew of the airplane Friendship had in their race for a trans-Atlantic airplane crossing, seemed destroyed today.

Although their competitor, Miss Mabel Bolling and the crew of the monoplane Columbia were still at Curtis Field, L. I., while the Friendship bobs on the waters of Trespassey Bay, the Friendship has shown several defects.

Two oil tanks this morning were reported leaking on the big Fokker plane while it was said one pontoon also had developed a leak. It was questionable whether they would be repaired in time for a take-off this morning.

SAN FRANCISCO Calif., June 8.—The worst weather of its entire flight from Oakland airport was encountered by the airplane Southern Cross today between Fiji Islands and Australia.

Torrential rains and a "bumpy" atmosphere that caused the plane to drop 400 feet on several occasions were reported in messages relayed from the Southern Cross to the Navy radio here.

"We did not want to worry anyone while we were in it but now we are out of it," the message said, "we will tell you that for the last two hours we have been battling the worst weather of the whole flight."

"At 7,500 to 6,000 feet altitude we experienced exceptionally heavy rain and bumps gave us drops of over 400 feet at a time. In general we are fighting a series of mean tricks by the elements on this last stage."

"Smithy (Capt. Charles Kingsford-Smith) and I are not through but as soon as the moon comes up and the blind flying ends for the night we will eat and have a shot of our emergency rations of whiskey."

"It is cold and we have no gloves but all are well." The message was signed "Ulm" (T. P. Ulm, the relief pilot).

The plane's position at the time of sending the message was given as 6:17 p. m. (Sydney time) or about nine hours out from Naselai Beach in the Fiji Islands, where the plans took off at 2:55 (Fiji time).

Another message from the plane received by the Navy radio here at 12:45 a. m. (Pacific Coast time) said the Southern Cross was approximately 500 miles out from Suva.

"Bad weather, rain, wet," the message said.

Previously a dispatch from Sydney timed 5:15 p. m. (Sydney time) said the plane was flying through rain at an altitude of 5,000 feet.

ROOSEVELT FIELD, L. I., June 8.—The plan of Miss Mabel Boll to be the first woman to fly across the Atlantic, retarded yesterday when the monoplane Columbia was forced to turn back to Roosevelt Field because of fog, faced another setback today.

Miss Boll and her two pilots, Oliver C. Leontillier and Arthur Argles, had planned to start northward again today probably for Old Orchard, Me., from where the trans-Atlantic start would be made.

Lieutenant Henry B. Clark, commandant of Roosevelt Field, said he would not permit the Columbia to leave Roosevelt Field today under any circumstances. Roosevelt Field has the only runway sufficiently long for a heavily loaded plane to get away. Clark criticized Charles A. Levine, owner of the Columbia, (Concluded on page seven)

DIPLOMATS WATCH SITUATION CLOSELY

TOKIO, June 8.—Confusion in North China, since the Nationalists were successful in forcing Chang Tso-Lin to retire as dictator of the Peking government caused diplomats today to watch the situation closely.

Reports reaching here from Tsingtao said that a corps of Japanese telegraphmen had been attacked by Chinese irregulars at Tengerh-Pu. Two companies of infantrymen and a machine gun detachment rushed to the aid of the Japanese, the advices said.

Additional reports told of interruption of telegraph service between Peking and Tsin Tsin, most coveted cities in the drive of the Nationalist Army into North China. There were reports of looting both around Peking and Tsin Tsin, much of which was carried on by soldiers not in uniform.

Thus far there have been no reports of fighting between the Nationalists and the few remaining northern forces in the territory of Most of the northern armies have retreated from their defense positions. Moves made simultaneously with the withdrawal of Chang Tso-Lin from Peking, and are now awaiting further orders.

"Daddy" Majors Honored On His 80th Birthday

Mr. John E. Majors of N. Court-st., was the honor guest at the meeting of the Pythian Sisters Thursday night at 7:30 in the Pythian Castle.

The regular meeting was followed by a surprise covered dish supper, which was given to celebrate the 80th birthday anniversary of Mr. Majors who for many years has been one of the most active and most regular members of the local organization. He is better known to members of that lodge as well as to a great number of other Circleville residents by the affectionate name "Daddy Majors."

He knew nothing about the arrangements until during the business meeting when the purpose of the affair was disclosed. After the meeting was adjourned, the first part of the evening was spent in games and contests. One of the numbers on the program was a piano duet by Miss Ruth and Miss Marjorie Young.

There were 85 guests who sat at long tables in the dining room. Here baskets of large peonies stood at the ends of the room. They were the gift of Marion Bros. Greenhouse. Cut flowers were used on the tables.

But the most elaborate and artistic feature of the table was a great angel food cake of two tiers, with white icing, and covered with 80 pink birthday candles set in small pink rosebuds. This very important part of the successful birthday party was the work of Mrs. Harriett Rife. The light of the 80 candles shed a bright glow over "Daddy" Majors' face.

BELIEVE BROWN WILL OPPOSE FESS

COLUMBUS, June 8.—Col. Thad H. Brown, Columbus, former secretary of state, will oppose Senator Simeon D. Fess, Yellow Springs, for the Republican nomination for the long term as U. S. Senator. Brown left here Thursday for Kansas City to attend the Republican National Convention. He has indicated to friends before his departure, however, that if Burton decided to become a candidate for the "short" term, he would file for the other nomination.

We are now selling the world's best tires—Michelin—with a 1-year guarantee against blow-outs, cuts, stone bruises, under-inflation and other road hazards

MICHELIN TIRES

YOU simply cannot lose when you buy Michelin Tires here. The super quality which is built into them assures you of more mileage unless one of your tires is injured by accident. But even accidents cannot rob you of full mileage when you deal here, because we give you a guarantee certificate with every Michelin, guaranteeing the tire for 1 year against blow-outs, cuts, stone bruises, under-inflation and other road hazards. That's some proposition, isn't it?

During the past two years, reports have been received from over 3000 motorists who were testing Michelins against other makes. These motorists were picked entirely at random; therefore you may be confident that your experience will be like theirs. More than 80% of them reported that Michelins gave more mileage than the other tires they were using. Of the remainder, only a few said Michelins gave less mileage; and these few exceptions, we are sure, were due to accidents. That's where our 1-year guarantee against road hazards comes in.

Michelin has the best tire; we have the best selling policy. The combination gives you the greatest certainty of tire satisfaction. Remember that when you need tires.

Progress in Lighting

A common laborer of today works about ten minutes each day to pay for the lighting of his home by means of electricity. A half-century ago he would have had to work two and a half hours to provide the same amount of light by means of gas flames. And if he had supplied himself a half-century ago with the same amount of light from candles he would have had to work 24 hours every day to pay his lighting bill. For this great reduction in the cost of artificial lighting, modern science is responsible.—Scientific American.

Not No! No!

No, Genevieve, a bridge lamp is not a lamp designed solely to shed light on the universal card game. It is a lamp equipped with an arm or "bridge" from which the bulb and shade are suspended. Hence its name. Quite, as you see, another idea altogether.

GOOD READING

One question in which all newspaper men are interested, and in which everyone should be, is as to how far people want what is called good reading, informative stuff appealing to intelligent people. Some folks claim that the majority of people nowadays are interested only in light trash.

Ray Long, editor in chief of the International Magazine company, remarks that serious literature is being much demanded by Americans. Over in England, he says, the really important books have only a small sale, but over here a fine work on some serious subject will have a big sale.

It is perhaps true that our people do not read for mere information as much as they did once. An article on China which merely supplied information about the people of that country, might not interest our folks much. But if they were offered one which showed how American trade with China could be greatly increased, they might read it. It would seem to touch their personal interests.

Two controlling motives with our people are ambition, and their reaction to stories that have a romantic and thrilling quality. They are interested in people who go out and do things, more than they are in description. Any writer who can put his information into story form, showing how people have done things that were considered impossible, will always get readers.

Anything that touches people's personal interests touches them. They might not read a general article on good government, but if you show them that they are paying too much in taxes because the government wastes money, then they get interested.

In time people will learn that to obtain success for their ambitions, they must be well informed. Those who go through life with only a smattering of information, and have made no effort to read good newspapers, magazines and books, and keep informed on what is going on in the world, are too superficial for any considerable success.

INTERNATIONAL TUNNELS

Not satisfied with ferries and bridges between the two countries where water divides them, Americans and Canadians are planning tunnels. It is significant of the new transportation age that these are to be not railroad tunnels but motor car tunnels.

Stock is being offered in a company organized to build such a tunnel under the Detroit River, between Detroit and Windsor, near the site of a big bridge whose erection has just begun. There is a similar tunnel projected across the St. Clair River between Port Huron and Sarnia. When these are accomplished facts, need may be felt for a tunnel across the Niagara River at Buffalo, alongside the new Peace Bridge dedicated only last year.

France and Great Britain have talked of a tunnel under the Channel for many years, but haven't yet been able to make up their minds that it's safe from military perils.

PHYSICAL CULTURE GROWS

The growth of interest in physical training is something marvelous. Back in 1914, only 13 years ago, there were but 1848 students in various institutions preparing to give instruction in physical culture. Now there are 12,000 preparing to be such teachers.

The idea is spreading all over the country that good physical development for the children is an essential of education. It does not do much good to cram the young people with knowledge, if they are sent out with weak and defective bodies. And even a good vocational training may not be of much use, if a young person is handicapped by poor health.

Good physical development is a vital essential of success. A person with good health and no book education, stands about as good a chance as one with good education but no health. We must give them both here in Ohio, which means physical culture in the schools.

HOME

Home's
The place
You always go
When your footsteps
Draggin' slow
Kinda feel they'd
Like a rest,
Home is where they
Get it best;
Weary of the daily
Grind,
Lookin' for a smile
That's kind,
And a word to cheer
You when
You are tired
Of work and men;
Kinda feel
You'll get a smile
And that Life
Is worth the
While,
Kinda know there's
Someone there
Who will help
To tote your care—
Sister and a brother,
Too,
When the day
Seems pretty blue,
Mother and a dad
To help
When you've sorta
Lost yourself—
Home's a fine old
Place to be
When you're filled
With misery—

And what we mean to say
Is,
Never go so far, o r
Room
That you lose sight
Of your home,
Never break the ties
Apart—
Home is really in
Your heart—
Roads may curve
And bend around,
Feet may touch some
Foreign ground,
In the end
You're glad to be
Back with all
Your family.

TODAY'S BEST STORY

McGuinness had been posted to keep guard over the entrance of a road which led to an old and unsafe bridge. Presently a car came along and he held up his hand.

"What's the matter?" growled the driver.

At that moment McGuinness recognized him as the county magistrate.

"Oh, it's yerself, yer honor," he said genially.

"Yes, it is!" was the snappy answer.

"Tis all right then," said Mac, as he stepped politely out of the way. "I got orders to let no traffic through because of the rotten bridge; but seein' it's you, yer honor, 'tis a pleasure—go right ahead, sir!"—Sent in by I. M. WILLING from American Legion Weekly.

"TENDERLOIN," starring Dolores Costello, is a Warner Bros. picture. Adaptation of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Chuck White, the beau of the Bowery, is seated at a table in Kelly's Ringside Cafe, drinking beer with a man whom he addresses as "Sparrow." Sparrow reminds Chuck that he is due to "pull something big" later in the evening and cautions him to keep his mind on his work. The Beau has been boasting of the impression he has made on lovely Rose Shannon, one of "Kelly's Girls" with whom he has been dancing earlier in the evening. Chuck reassures Sparrow, telling him that he is badly in need of money. Later Chuck takes Rose home to her dingy lodgings.

At last they reached the top floor of the old, tumble-down rooming house and Rose opened her door. She felt along the shelf for the packet of matches, and struck one, applying it to the gas jet. A sudden flame burst into being, revealing the shabbiness of a Bowery tenement. The dark red paper had once been figured with great bunches of roses, but the flowers had long ago lost their first freshness of bloom, and now they hung dispirited, where they hung at all. Rose blew out the match and placed it carefully in a little tin beside the burner.

"Well, Chuck, this is—this is home," Rose laughed self-consciously as she flung out her arms to show the small cubby-hole that harbored her.

Chuck looked about him. On one side of the room, facing the door, stood a rickety oak washstand with a cracked bowl and pitcher. One gray, bedraggled towel hung limply over the rack. A cracked mirror, mildewed with age, was suspended over the stand. A solitary chair, the paint badly scraped off, stood beside the white iron bed, spotted and peeling. A dingy window, now black and rain-spotted, looked out onto a courtyard. Only the cheap cretonne curtains that formed a sort of wardrobe lent a touch of color to the room.

"Chuck, please, you mustn't!"

"It ain't so dusty, kid," Chuck turned and caught Rose's hand, scarcely noting the shabbiness of his surroundings. "One of these days I'll get you a swell damp—if you're good."

Rose laughed and evaded the arm that was already reaching about her waist. "Listen, Chuck, don't you want some coffee? I'm going to make some." She turned for a second, impulsively, and looked into the man's eyes, and threw her arms about his neck. And then laughing, she pushed him away. She opened the little cupboard beneath the washstand and drew out a gray enameled coffee pot scorched from the gas flames, and filled it up with water.

Chuck flung his hat and coat across the only chair and sat down, rubbing his hands to warm them. He watched Rose as she bustled herself about the room. He glanced sideways once or twice at the bed, and then his eyes would take up their appraising look. He was quite sure of himself now. He'd never let down, and the way he had been trailing this little dame was nobody's business, he told himself. There was one nice thing about her, she wasn't hardboiled. That meant that she wouldn't be after him for a lot of dough and glad rags. He reached out his hand and tried to pull the girl down on his knee.

Rose laughed happily and caught his hand in hers. "Do you know, Chuck, you're the first man that's ever been in my room. It does seem sort of funny—I don't know whether it's right or not." She looked at Chuck appealingly, as though for confirmation of her unbounded confidence in him.

"Sure, it's all right, honey," Chuck assured her. "I wouldn't do nothing in the world to hurt you, honest." He put his arms about her tenderly, certain now of his ground.

Suddenly Rose broke loose from his clasp, gasping. "Heavens, Chuck, the coffee!" She rushed over to the burner, snatching the towel on her way, and reached for the pot that was already boiling over and bubbling on the plate.

Chuck reached over and took her hand from the cup, facing her about. "I gotta leave you pretty soon. I gotta business date or two."

Rose frowned, not at all understanding what was going on. Chuck's mind. In fact she was a little hurt that he had paid such small attention to all her ministrations and yet, at the same time, her heart jumped with joy, for she believed that it was because Chuck thought more of her than he did of the coffee that he wanted her to forget it. And so she allowed him to draw her closely to him.

Chuck's smile was a happy one, for he was content now that Rose was his for the asking. He sat down on the bed, pulling the girl beside him and put his arms about her. He drew her face up to his and kissed her again and again. For a moment Rose returned his kisses. It was so thrilling to sit there in the arms of the man she loved and who, she believed, loved her.

But as his breath fanned hot on her neck, and his kisses grew more passionate, Rose turned suddenly and looked into his eyes. She drew back, startled, as she suddenly realized that what she saw there was not the love she had believed, but a calculating coldness that frightened her. She tried to pull away, but Chuck's arms only closed about her. She pushed with futile hands at his face, trying to tear his lips away from hers. Chuck stared at her at last in bewilderment.

"What's the matter, kid? Don't you love me," he questioned, frowning.

But Rose had jumped to her feet and was standing, leaning against the wash stand, her eyes bright with tears. She shook her head, gazing with hurt looks at the man before her. Her slight body trembled, her breath came quick and short. No one had ever kissed her like that. She had never been so close to the way Chuck had, and she could not yet realize what he had meant. But she only knew from that look she had seen on his face that there was something strange about the entire situation.

"Aw, jeez, Babe, I didn't mean nothing wrong. I'm sorry. Come on, kiss me and tell me you'll forgive me." For the moment Chuck's face was soft and tender as he looked at the slender, golden-haired figure before him. He decided to try new tactics. Maybe she needed a little coaxing—maybe he had been a little hasty. And so he rose and put his arms about her and kissed her very gently.

"You're a sweet kid, honest," Chuck brushed back the curly hair that fell in a mass of ripples all about the slender, oval face. But that appealing look was no appeal. And Chuck's lips were once more covering her eyes, her cheeks, her mouth.

"Chuck, please, you mustn't! You mustn't!" Rose tried to pull herself away. "Oh, please, Chuck!"

But the time was growing short and Chuck knew that it was almost the hour for his rendezvous. He had no intention of walking out and leaving this girl after he had spent so many, many evenings just being nice to her and playing up for this one moment. And so he drew more surely towards the bed, his arms clasped about her like bands of iron.

"No! No! No!" Rose shrieked. Her tiny fists beat a futile trade on his chest, struggling impotently against a fate that seemed almost marked out for her. Blindly she battled, and as she sobbed she remembered the words of Mamie uttered earlier in the evening.

She had been a fool to trust herself alone with this man. All the past warnings of the girls around the Cafe flashed through her mind. She must do something, and yet she could not free herself. Desperate, she flung out her arms behind her. Her hands caught on the edge of the wash-stand, balancing her for a moment. Suddenly her fingers struck against an old clock. With all the frenzy born of desperation, she snatched at it, raised it high in the air, and with all her strength brought it down on the head of this person who was slowly overpowering her.

Suddenly the body of the man crashed to the floor, crumpling up, writhing before her. Rose stood as still as though she had been suddenly turned to stone. She stared down at the figure, scarcely realizing what she had done. She saw a faint trickle of blood oozing across Chuck's forehead. The sight made her slightly sick, and she wavered for a moment, unsteadily. The weight in her hand caused her to look and then she knew that she herself had caused the blood, for there was the clock, a little smear of red across its face.

The Dogmatic Martyr

When I believe something, I never attribute the least dogmatic significance to my belief. That which I call my faith is merely an indication that for me, with my own personal aptitudes, experiences and mentality, a certain particular explanation seems to disprove most plausibly of a certain particular phenomenon. It is by no means an indication that I should be prepared to face death for my beliefs or in other words, to prove that my individual experiences have a universal validity and my individual ways of thinking should be shared by every one. Martyrdom always shows the intensity of our beliefs never their justice. We cannot prevail upon others to share our faith. At the very best we can only try to convince them of our willingness to be martyred.—Arthur Schnitzler in Venture Fair

There is a similar tunnel projected across the St. Clair River between Port Huron and Sarnia. When these are accomplished, need may be felt for a tunnel across the Niagara River at Buffalo, alongside the new Peace Bridge dedicated only last year.

France and Great Britain have talked of a tunnel under the Channel for many years, but haven't yet been able to make up their minds that it's safe from military perils.

PHYSICAL CULTURE GROWS

The growth of interest in physical training is something marvelous. Back in 1914, only 13 years ago, there were but 1845 students in various institutions preparing to give instruction in physical culture. Now there are 12,000 preparing to be such teachers.

The idea is spreading all over the country that good physical development for the children is an essential of education. It does not do much good to cram the young people with knowledge, if they are sent out with weak and defective bodies. And even a good educational training may not be of much use, if a young person is handicapped by poor health.

Good physical development is a vital essential of success. A person with good health and no book education, stands about as good a chance as one with good education but no health. We must give them both here in Ohio, which means physical culture in the schools.

The Rambler

By NORMAN W. RALSTON

HOME

Home's
The place
You always go
When your footsteps
Draggin' slow
Kinda feel they'd
Like a rest,
Home is where they
Get it best;
Weary of the daily
Grind,
Lookin' for a smile
That's kind,
And a word to cheer
You when
You are tired
Of work and men;
Kinda feel
You'll get a smile
And that Life
Is worth the
While,
Kinda know there's
Someone there
Who will help
To tote your care—
Sister and a brother,
Too,
When the day
Seems pretty blue,
Mother and a dad
To help
When you've sorta
Lost yourself—
Home's a fine old
Place to be
When you're filled
With misery—

And what we mean to say
Is,
Never go so far, or
Room
That you lose sight
Of your home,
Never break the ties
Apart—
Home is really in
Your heart—
Roads may curve
And bend around,
Feet may touch some
Foreign ground,
In the end
You're glad to be
Back with all
Your family.

TODAY'S BEST STORY
McGuinness had been posted to keep guard over the entrance of a road which led to an old and unsafe bridge. Presently a car came along and he held up his hand.

"What's the matter?" growled the driver.

At that moment McGuinness recognized him as the county magistrate.

"Oh, it's yourself, yer honor," he said smiling.

"Yes it is" was the snappy answer.

"Is all right then?" said Mac, as he stood politely out of the way.

"I got orders to let no traffic through because of the rotten bridge, but seem' it's you yer honor it's a pleasure—go right ahead sir!" Sent in by J. M. WILLING from American Legion Weekly.

"TENDERLOIN," starring Dolores Costello, is a Warner Bros. production of this novel.

SYNOPSIS
Chuck White, the beau of the Bowery, is seated at a table in Kelly's Kingside Cafe, drinking beer with a man whom he addresses as "Sparrow." Sparrow reminds Chuck that he is due to "pull something big" later in the evening and cautions him to keep his mind on his work. The Beau has been boasting of the impression he has made on lovely Rose Shannon, one of "Kelly's Girls" with whom he has been dancing earlier in the evening. Chuck reassures Sparrow, telling him that he is badly in need of money. Later Chuck takes Rose home to her dingy lodgings.

At last they reached the top floor of the old, tumble-down rooming house and Rose opened her door. She felt along the shelf for the packet of matches, and struck one, applying it to the gas jet. A sudden flame burst into being, revealing the shabbiness of a Bowery tenement. The dark red paper had once been figured with great bunches of roses, but the flowers had long ago lost their first freshness of bloom, and now they hung dispirited, where they hung at all. Rose blew out the match and placed it carefully in a little tin beside the burner.

"Well, Chuck, this is—is this home," Rose laughed self-consciously as she flung out her arms to show the small cubby-hole that harbored her.

Chuck looked about him. On one side of the room, facing the door, stood a rickety oak washstand with a cracked bowl and pitcher. One gray, bedraggled towel hung limply over the rack. A cracked mirror, mildewed with age, was suspended over the stand. A solitary chair, the paint badly scraped off, stood beside the white iron bed, spotted and peeling. A dingy window, now black and rain-spotted, looked out onto a courtyard. Only the cheap cretonne curtains that formed a sort of wardrobe lent a touch of color to the room.

"Chuck, please, you mustn't!"

"It ain't so dusty, kid," Chuck turned and caught Rose's hand, scarcely noting the shabbiness of his surroundings. "One of these days I'll get you a swell dump—if you're good."

Rose laughed and evaded the arm that was already reaching about her waist. "Listen, Chuck, don't you want some coffee? I'm going to make some." She turned for a second, impulsively, and looked into the man's eyes, and threw her arms about his neck. And then laughing, she pushed him away. She opened the little cupboard beneath the washstand and drew out a gray enamel coffee pot scorched from the gas flames, and filled it up with water.

Chuck flung his hat and coat across the only chair and sat down, rubbing his hands to warm them. He watched Rose as she bustled herself about the room. He glanced sideways once or twice at the bed, and then his eyes would take up their appraising look. He was quite sure of himself now. He'd never met a jake yet who turned him down, and the way he had been trailing this little dame was nobody's business, he told himself. There was one nice thing about her, she wasn't hardboiled. That meant that she wouldn't be after him for a lot of dough and glad rags. He reached out his hand and tried to pull the girl down on his knee.

Rose laughed happily and caught his hand in hers. "Do you know, Chuck, you're the first man that's ever been in my room. It does seem sort of funny—I don't know whether it's right or not." She looked at Chuck appealingly, as though for confirmation of her unbounded confidence in him.

"Sure, it's all right, honey," Chuck assured her. "I wouldn't do nothing in the world to hurt you, honest." He put his arms about her tenderly, certain now of his ground.

Suddenly Rose broke loose from his clasp, gasping. "Heavens, Chuck, the coffee!" She rushed over to the burner, snatching the towel on her way, and reached for the pot that was already boiling over and bubbling on the plate.

"Let's forget the java, honey," Chuck reached over and took her hand from the cup, facing her about. "I gotta leave you pretty soon. I gotta business outside or two." Rose frowned, but at all understanding what was going on in Chuck's mind. In fact she was a little hurt that he paid such small attention to all her ministrations and yet, at the same time, her heart jumped with joy, for she believed that it was because Chuck thought more of her than he did of the coffee that he wanted her to forget it. And so she allowed him to draw her closely to him.

Chuck's smile was a happy one, for he was confident now that Rose was his for the asking. He sat down on the bed, pulling the girl beside him and put his arms about her. He drew her face up to his and kissed her again and again. For a moment Rose returned his kisses. It was so thrilling to sit there in the arms of the man she loved and who, she believed, loved her.

But as his breath flamed hot on her neck, and his kisses grew more passionate, Rose turned suddenly and looked into his eyes. She drew back, startled, as she suddenly realized that what she saw there was not the love she had believed, but a calculating coldness that frightened her. She tried to pull away, but Chuck's arms only closed about her in a tighter grasp. Frantically she pushed with futile hands at his face, trying to tear his lips away from hers. Chuck stared at her at last in bewilderment.

"What's the matter, kid? Don't you love me," he questioned, frowning.

But Rose had jumped to her feet and was standing, leaning against the wash stand, her eyes bright with tears. She shook her head, gazing with hurt looks at the man before her. Her slight body trembled, her breath came quick and short. No one had ever kissed her the way Chuck had, and she could not yet realize what he had meant. But she only knew from that look she had seen on his face that there was something strange about the entire situation.

"Aw, jeez, Babe, I didn't mean nothing wrong. I'm 'drippin' come on, kiss me and tell me you'll forgive me." For the moment Chuck's face was soft and tender as he looked at the slender, golden haired figure before him. He decided to try new tactics. Maybe she needed a little coaxing—maybe he had been a little busy. And so he rose and put his arms about her and kissed her very gently.

"You're a sweet little thing," Chuck brushed back the curly hair that fell in a mass of ripples all about the slender, oval face. But that appealing look was gone, and Chuck's lips were once more covering her eyes, her cheeks, her mouth.

"Chuck, please, you mustn't! You mustn't!" Rose tried to pull herself away. "Oh, please, Chuck!" But the time was growing short and Chuck knew that it was almost the hour for his rendezvous and he had no intention of waiting off and leaving this girl after he had spent so many, many evenings just being nice to her and playing up for this one moment. And so he drew more surely towards the bed, his arms clasped about her like bands of iron.

"No! No! No!" Rose shrieked. Her tiny fists beat a futile trade on his chest, struggling impotently against a fate that seemed almost marked out for her. Blindly she battled, and as she sobbed she remembered the words of Mamie uttered earlier in the evening.

She had been a fool to trust herself alone with this man. All the past warnings of the girls around the Cafe flashed through her mind. She must do something, and yet she could not free herself. Desperate, she flung out her arms behind her. Her hands caught on the edge of the washstand, balancing her for a moment. Suddenly her fingers struck against an old clock. With all the frenzy born of desperation, she snatched at it, raised it high in the air, and with all her strength brought it down on the head of the person who was slowly overpowering her.

Suddenly the body of the man crashed to the floor, crumpling up, writhing before her. Rose stood still as though she had been suddenly turned to stone. She stared down at the figure, scarcely realizing what she had done. She saw a faint trickle of blood oozing across Chuck's forehead. The sight made her slightly sick, and she warred for a moment, undecided, the weight in her hand caused her to look and then she knew that he herself had caused the blood, for there was the clock, a little smear of red across his face.

The Dogmatic Martyr

When I believe something, I have attribute the least dogmatic significance to my belief. That which I call my faith is merely an indication that for me with my own personal aptitudes, experiences and mentality, a certain particular explanation seems to dispose most plausibly of a certain particular phenomenon. It is by no means an indication that I should be prepared to face death for my belief or in other words to prove that my individual experiences have a universal validity and my individual ways of thinking should be shared by every one. Martyrdom always shows the intensity of our beliefs never their justice. We cannot prevail upon others to share our faith. At the very best, we can only try to convince them of our willingness to be martyred.—Arthur Scholze in Century Club

STOCKS BREAK

NEW YORK, June 8.—Rubber stocks broke sharply on the New York stock exchange today. Good-year, Goodrich and the U. S. Rubber company issues striking new low prices for the year.

The break was unexplained except by the belief that Wall Street insiders were aware of information regarding lire cut announcements expected shortly from the leading producers. Mail order houses recently announced big reductions, which are expected to force similar action by the large companies.

PAYNE TO TELL FOLKS ABOUT RACE

NEW YORK, June 8.—Andy Payne, Oklahoma farm boy whose flying feet carried him to wealth and fame in C. C. Pyle's bunion derby, is going back and tell the home folks how he did it.

Andy has a mission. Just as Col. Charles A. Lindbergh made the country "air conscious" by his national airplane tour, so Andy is going to extoll the benefits of cross-country racing.

Pyle, who recently paid Andy $25,000 as the winner of the derby and passed out $23,500 more in prizes, told of Andy's plans today. The bunion derby is said to have put Pyle on the brink of financial disaster. From his rooms in the Vanderbilt Hotel (suits $39 a for using the runway at the field yesterday without first obtaining permission. Yesterday when the start for Old Orchard was made, the Columbia was wheeled from Curtiss Field to the runway and a start for Old Orchard made at 6:15 a. m. A few hours later the craft returned to Curtiss Field after it had encountered heavy fog.

"If necessary we will employ revolvers to keep intruders off the field," Clark said in announcing his opposition to Levine's actions. Miss Boll could not be reached for a statement concerning this "new difficulty that confronted her plans. She had indicated late yesterday that mechanics would wheel the Columbia from its hangar this morning and that if weather conditions were favorable the start for Old Orchard would be attempted.

VETERAN TO ATTEND NATIONAL CONVENTION

BELLEFONTAINE, O., June 8.—Col. I. N. Zearing, 82, Civil war veteran and prominent citizen of this city, plans to leave Sunday for Kansas City to attend the 14th Republican National convention which he has witnessed. Only once since 1876 has Mr. Zearing failed to attend the national convention of his party. That was in 1900 when he failed to go to Philadelphia.

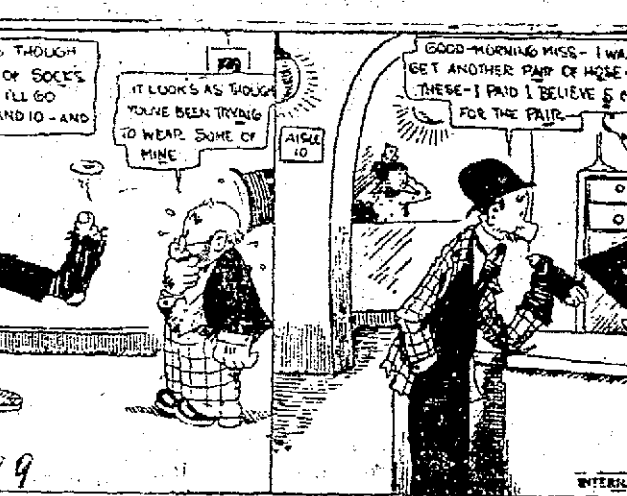

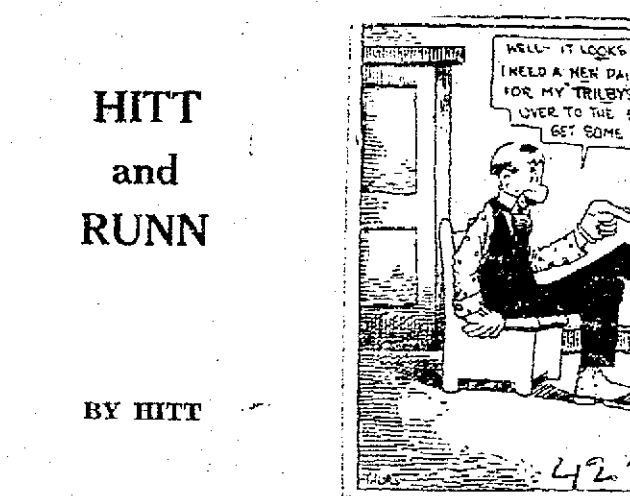

Day, to which he moved from the Baltimore Hotel (suits $50 a day) after paying off the runners. Pyle outlined an educational campaign for Andy.

"Children in Oklahoma are crying to see Andy," said Pyle. "His stride is so marvelous that when he demonstrates it, people will want more cross-country foot races. So Andy and I are going to tour every town in Oklahoma. At each town Andy will run a bit, then lecture a bit. His subject will be the joys of running across the United States.

The Short-Lived Pin

By a series of experiments conducted on his estate a French investigator has discovered that pins go the way of all flesh and are dissolved to dust. Hairpins, which the experimenter watched for 154 days, disappeared at the end of that time, having been dissolved into a ferrous oxide, a brownish rust, which was blown away by the wind.

Bright pins took nearly 18 months to disappear, polished steel needles nearly two and a half years, brass pins had but little endurance; steel pins at the end of 15 months had nearly gone, while their wooden holders were still intact.

Pencils with which he also experimented, softened little by exposure, the lead was unharmed and the cedar almost as good as new.

Sympathetic Understanding

A young American mother went to stay with Mr. and Mrs. Richard Kipling in England. Necessity had forced her to leave in America her two little girls, from whom she had never been parted before. Upon arrival at the Kipling home, much worried at not having heard from the children, she was greeted by a cable saying they were well. R. Kipling's words arose in her ears. "R. Kipling's words in 'My Mother's and Some Travels.' Kipling saw them and said to his sister: 'Take Mrs. up to the nursery and show her the children. What she wants is help.'—Trist."

OUTSTANDING TRACK STARS GATHER FOR BIG MEET

EIGHT MARKS EXPECTED TO BE SHATTERED

Only Preliminary Events To Be Run Today; Tomorrow Is Big Event

CHICAGO, June 8.—The outstanding track stars of the United States gathered here today for the annual National Collegiate Athletic Association track and field meet.

At least eight records were expected to fall before the end of the finals tomorrow. Only preliminary events will be run today.

The outstanding feature of the meet probably will be the contest between Stanford and the University of Illinois for team supremacy. Illinois holds the Big Ten conference title, while Stanford won the Eastern title and is rated the class of the West coast.

It is interesting to note that in the six years when team championships were awarded in the meet, the West coast has taken three and the Big Ten three. Illinois won in 1921 and again last year. Michigan won in 1923, California in 1922, Stanford in 1925 and Southern California in 1926.

This year's entry list represented one of the greatest collection of stars ever gathered for the meet.

The present meet mark for the 100-yard dash is .09.8, set by De Hart Hubbard in 1925. Ten men in the meet have bettered that mark this year. Of these Simpson, of Ohio, was considered the probable winner. His record is .09.6, set in the Ohio relays.

Michigan won in 1923, California in 1922, Stanford in 1925. Locke of Nebraska set a mark of .20.9 in the 320-yard dash in 1926, but that may be lowered if the weather stays good and the track fast. Simpson and Barnes of Oberlin, if pressed, might cut a tenth from even that fast time.

The 440-yard dash record of .48.5, made last year, also appeared to have little chance of standing. Spencer of Stanford, Walter of Northwestern, Baird of Iowa, Snider of Alabama Poly or Gist of Chicago, may break it.

Epstein of Missouri and White of Illinois were expected to push each other in the half mile with the result that the mark of 1:54.2 may be lowered.

The mile and two mile marks—4:17.6 and 9:31, respectively—are almost certain to fall. Abbott of Illinois has run the two-mile in 9:23.7 this year.

Of the field events, nearly all seem safe with the possible exception of the shot put. The record in the former is 50 feet, 3/4 inch.

Many Peculiar Types of Medical "Healers"

In primitive times medicine and mysticism were closely connected. Out of priestcraft came the first physicians. The calling of physician was handed down from father to son, and many superstitions arose, such as the peculiar power ascribed to a seventh son of a seventh son.

The idea persisted in many places. Dr. Dan McKenzie, who has traced the evolution of the medicine man from the witch doctor and the priest physician, lists 13 types of folk doctors in tribes of southern Europe, including the peasant doctor who depends for his diagnosis on the inspection of excreted fluids; women doctors who learned their art by heredity; midwives, bone setters, surgeons, tooth-pullers, blacksmiths, skinner or flayers and praying men.

Of all the nations of the world, the United States has the most variegated and complete assortment of peculiar practitioners of medicine, comments Hygeia Magazine. They cure by every medium. Thirty-seven varieties of religious healers alone have been listed. In the midst of this bizarre assortment scientific medicine pursues its way, taking from any source that may develop an established fact.

SMALL FIGHT CROWD AT BIG GARDEN TILT

Bottom Drops Out Of Sock Market And Emanuel Trounces McTigue

BY FRANK GETTY
United Press Sports Editor.
MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, NEW YORK, June 7.—The bottom appears to be falling out of the stock market.

To the list of recent matches staged in the East this spring, which have proved financial bloomers, must be added the affair at Madison Square Garden last night in which Armand Emanuel of California, fought his way to a decision over old Mike McTigue in ten rounds.

The smallest fight crowd of the Garden season showed up to watch the aged Irishman attempt to stand off the rushes of the eager youngster and withstand the ravages which time has made in the fistie ability of one of the prize ring's oldest favorites.

Recent boxing shows at Ebbets Field, Brooklyn, on which Humbert J. Pugavay has lost money rapidly are being matched by the financial fizzes in Tex Rickard's own Madison Square Garden.

It is not surprising that Rickard, after announcing July 26 the date for the heavyweight championship fight between Gene Tunney and Tom Hisey, made it known that he would promote no other bouts during July.

Whether it is that the public, which paid through the nose for its boxing entertainments during the past two years, is becoming money-wise and declining to support second-rate shows at first-rate prices remains to be seen. Certainly the vast expenses of empty seats in the Madison Square Garden last night constituted merely one more suggestion to Eastern promoters that they cannot hope to keep on charging exorbitant prices for indifferent exhibitions.

Mike McTigue, who admits to some 40 summers, and has seen some others he does not care to mention, furnished the lone thrill of last night's performance when he drove a straight right to Armand Emanuel's chin in the opening round and dropped the Jewish heavyweight for the count of nine.

Many other famous discoveries have been called in question, and the claims of inventors and scientists discredited by the explosion of similar popular myths surrounding their work.

There was a heated controversy as to whether George Stephenson or Sir Humphrey Davy was the first to invent the miners' safety lamp. When the adducers of a safety lamp presented him a copy of plate those of Stephenson countered with an address and a gift of $1,000 in 1818. Henry Bell, the Scottish engineer who placed the first ship, the Comet, on the Clyde in 1812, had to concede priority for the invention to Robert Fulton, an American engineer.

"Bunyip" Frightens Many
That the mysterious "bunyip" is again being heard at night in the Wingecarribee swamp, is declared by people of the Burrawang district of Australia. The cry, which is unlike that of any domestic animal, is said to have been heard in the center of the swamp. Although the "bunyip" with its weird noise has been a tradition of the Wingecarribee swamp for more than 50 years, there is no authentic record of anyone having seen it.

Baseball

Yesterday's hero, Rube Bressler, Brooklyn outfielder, who beat his former teammates with a single in the eleventh which scored Hendrick from third, giving the Robins a 1 to 0 victory over the league-leading Cincinnati Reds. Pete Donohue yielded the Robins only five hits while Bill Doak allowed the Reds six. It was the third straight defeat for the Reds.

Jack Cummings, pinch-hitting in the ninth, singled and Bill Terry scored the winning run in the New York Giants 4 to 3 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals. The victory lifted the Giants back to second place ten percentage points less than a game below the Reds.

Pete Scott, sometimes outfielder and catcher but now first baseman, blazed the trail for the Pittsburgh Pirates to beat the Boston Braves, 8 to 6, in 12 innings, with two home runs and a double.

Shutout for seven innings, the New York Yankees called their home run brigade into action in the eighth and ninth innings and hammered out an 8 to 2 victory over the Cleveland Indians. Lazzeri, Ruth and Gehrig hit homers in the last two innings. Lazzeri with one on and Ruth with two. Joe Shaute previously had held the Yanks to four hits in seven innings.

Alvin Crowder held the Philadelphia Athletics to four scattered hits, the St. Louis Browns winning 4 to 1. Five straight hits in the third inning, one a home run by Brannon, scored four runs and drove Lefty Grove from the mound.

Owen Carroll gave the Boston Red Sox but five hits and the Detroit Tigers displaced the Red Sox in fifth place in the American League with a 5 to 2 victory.

With Eucky Harris back in the lineup, the Washington Senators beat the Chicago White Sox, 7 to 5, the Senators moving to seventh place as the White Sox sank into the cellar.

The Philadelphia Phillies broke their nine game losing streak when Ray Benge held the Cubs to six hits, the Phillies winning 4 to 2.

But the elderly Irishman could not follow up his advantage and at the finish he was a badly beaten boxer, clinging on against the final bell which ended the fight.

Great Soldier's Bed

Speeding Motor Car
One black day in April, 1918, when the British army was fighting for its life I came upon a strange spectacle in the retreating flood of war wreckage that filled the roads leading westward from our crumbling front.

It was a shining limousine, all plate glass and upholstery, with a solitary occupant behind the smart soldier driving, a general officer of the type commonly known as a "Brass Hat." He was muffled in an overcoat, and he half sat, half reclined on the cushions, his head tilted against the padded back, altogether an incongruous picture of ease and contentment. The tired and hungry soldiers on the road looked at him with amazement, for he was asleep.

Few of them noticed the union jack on the top of the car, or realized that the only man who slept in all that tragic multitude was the "C. in C."—Sir Douglas Haig as he was then, or that he slept from sheer exhaustion because he had not slept since the German advance began. As he drove constantly from one headquarters to another behind the stricken line, he would snatch a few uneasy moments of slumber. It was his only chance.

This is my most vivid recollection of Lord Haig. During those critical days when, as he himself said, our men were fighting with their backs to the wall, he was constantly among them, and in places where no commander-in-chief need have been. He was a silent man, and shy, and by no means given to spectacular gestures of approval. Sir Percival Phillips in the Continental Edition of the London Daily Mail.

YOU SMOKERS, READ THIS

If You Have Been Skeptical of Five-cent Cigars

To the gentlemen of the smoke jury—to you men who have reached the decision that you just can't get a good smoke for five cents—we want to offer some new evidence. All we ask you to do is to try one more five-cent brand: Havana Ribbon. You're going to be surprised! At last, for the small sum of five cents you can get a cigar made entirely of ripe, long-leaf tobacco. Never heard of such a thing? Maybe not. But it's a joyous reality now. Not a strand of bitter, raspy under-ripe nor a trace of insipid over-ripe tobacco usually found in low-priced cigars. Nor any short, loose ends to crumble in your mouth. No, sir, Havana Ribbon has the fragrance, mellow-mildness, rich flavor of fine tobacco at its best. Because every leaf is fully RIPE. Risk one nickel, men—at any nearby cigar counter. Or, better still, try a Practical Pocket Package of five cigars.

OUTSTANDING TRACK STARS GATHER FOR BIG MEET

EIGHT MARKS EXPECTED TO BE SHATTERED

Only Preliminary Events To Be Run Today; Tomorrow Is Big Event

CHICAGO, June 8.—The outstanding track stars of the United States gathered here today for the annual National Collegiate Athletic Association track and field meet.

At least eight records were expected to fall before the end of the finals tomorrow. Only preliminary events will be run today.

The outstanding feature of the meet probably will be the contest between Stanford and the University of Illinois for team supremacy. Illinois holds the Big Ten conference title, while Stanford won the Eastern title and is rated the class of the West coast.

It is interesting to note that in the six years when team championships were awarded in the meet, the West coast has taken three and the Big Ten three. Illinois won in 1921 and again last year. Michigan won in 1923, California in 1922, Stanford in 1925 and Southern California in 1926.

This year's entry list represented one of the greatest collection of stars ever gathered for the meet.

The present meet mark for the 100-yard dash is .09.8, set by De Hart Hubbard in 1925. Ten men in the meet have bettered that mark this year. Of these Simpson, of Ohio, was considered the probable winner. His record is .09.6, set in the Ohio relays.

Michigan won in 1923, California in 1922, Stanford in 1925. Locke of Nebraska set a mark of .20.9 in the 320-yard dash in 1926, but that may be lowered if the weather stays good and the track fast. Simpson and Barnes of Oberlin, if pressed, might cut a tenth from even that fast time.

The 440-yard dash record of .48.5, made last year, also appeared to have little chance of standing. Spencer of Stanford, Walter of Northwestern, Baird of Iowa, Scider of Alabama Poly or Gist of Chicago, may break it.

Epstein of Missouri and White of Illinois were expected to push each other in the half mile with the result that the mark of 1:54.2 may be lowered.

The mile and two mile marks—4:17.6 and 9:31, respectively—are almost certain to fall. Abbott of Illinois has run the two-mile in 9:28.7 this year.

Of the field events, nearly all seem safe with the possible exception of the shot put. The record in the former is 59 feet, 2 1/2 inches.

Many Peculiar Types of Medical "Healers"

In primitive times medicine and mysticism were closely connected. Out of priestcraft came the first physicians. The calling of physician was handed down from father to son, and many superstitions arose, such as the peculiar power ascribed to a seventh son of a seventh son.

The idea persisted in many places. Dr. Dan McKenna, who has traced the evolution of the medicine man from the witch doctor and the priest physician, lists 13 types of folk doctors in tribes of southern Europe, including the peasant doctor who depends for his diagnosis on the inspection of excreted fluids; women doctors who learned their art by heredity, midwives, bone setters, surgeons, tooth-pullers, blacksmiths, skinner of floggers and praying men.

Of all the nations in the world the United States has the most variegated and complete assortment of peculiar practitioners of medicine, comments Hiram Maczine. They cure by every method. Thirty-seven varieties of medical healers alone have been listed. The midst of this bizarre assortment scientific medicine pursues its way, taking from any source that may develop in its evolution.

SMALL FIGHT CROWD AT BIG GARDEN TILT

Bottom Drops Out Of Sock Market And Emanuel Trounces McTigue

BY FRANK GETTY
United Press Sports Editor.
MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, NEW YORK, June 7.—The bottom appears to be falling out of the stock market.

To the list of recent matches staged in the East this spring, which have proved financial bonanzas, must be added the affair at Madison Square Garden last night in which Armand Emanuel of California, fought his way to a decision over old Mike McTigue in ten rounds.

The smallest fight crowd of the Garden season showed up to watch the aged Irishman attempt to stand off the rushes of the eager youngster and withstand the ravages which time has made in the fists of one of the prize ring's oldest veterans.

Recent boxing shows at Ebbets Field, Brooklyn, on which Harbert J. Fugate has lost money rapidly are being matched by the financial fizzes in Tex Rickard's own Madison Square Garden.

It is not surprising that Rickard, after announcing July 26 the date for the heavyweight championship fight between Gene Tunney and Tom Heeney, made it known that he would promote no other bouts during July.

Whether it is that the public, which paid through the nose for its boxing entertainments during the past two years, is becoming money-wise and declining to support second-rate shows at first-rate prices remains to be seen. Certainly the vast expenses of empty seats in the Madison Square Garden last night constituted merely one more suggestion to Eastern promoters that they cannot hope to keep on charging exorbitant prices for indifferent exhibitions.

Mike McTigue, who admits to some 40 summers, and has seen some others he does not care to mention, furnished the lone thrill of last night's performance when he drove a straight right to Armand Emanuel's chin in the opening round and dropped the Jewish heavyweight for the count of nine.

Many other famous discoveries have been called in question, and the claims of inventors and scientists dispelled by the explosion of similar popular myths surrounding their work.

There was a heated controversy as to whether George Stephenson or Sir Humphrey Davy was the first to invent the miners' safety lamp. When the admirers of Davy in 1817 presented him a service of plate those of Stephenson countered with an address and a gift of £1,000 in 1819. Henry Ford, the Scott's engineer who placed the first ship, the Comer, on the Clyde in 1912 had to concede priority for the invention to Robert Fulton, an American engineer.

"Bunyip" Frightens Many
That the mysterious "bunyip" is again being heard of, as in the Wingemadine swamp, is declared by people of the Narracan district of Australia. The cry, which is unlike that of any domestic animal, is said to have been heard in the center of the swamp. Although the "bunyip" with its head also has been a subject for more than 70 years, there is no authentic record of its being seen.

Yesterday's hero: Rube Bressler, Brooklyn outfielder, who beat his former teammates with a single in the eleventh when scored Hendrick from third, giving the Robins a 1 to 0 victory over the league-leading Cincinnati Reds. Pete Donohue yielded the Robins only five hits while Bill Doan allowed the Reds six. It was the third straight defeat for the Reds.

Jack Cummings, pinch-hitting in the ninth, singled and Bill Terry scored the winning run in the New York Giants 4 to 3 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals. The victory lifted the Giants back to second place, ten percentage points less than a game below the Reds.

Pete Scott, sometimes outfielder and catcher but now first baseman, blazed the trail for the Pittsburgh Pirates to beat the Boston Braves, 5 to 6, in 12 innings, with two home runs and a double.

Shutout for seven innings, the New York Yankees called their home run brigade into action in the eighth and ninth innings and hammered out an 8 to 2 victory over the Cleveland Indians. Lazzeri and Gehrig hit homers in the last two innings. Lazzeri with one on and Ruth with two. Joe Shaute previously had held the Yanks to four hits in seven innings.

Alvin Crowder held the Philadelphia Athletics to four scattered hits, the St. Louis Browns winning 4 to 1. Five straight hits in the third inning, one a home run by Brannon, scored four runs and drove Lefty Grove from the mound.

Owen Carroll gave the Boston Red Sox but five hits and the Detroit Tigers displaced the Red Sox in fifth place in the American League with a 5 to 2 victory.

With Eucky Harris back in the lineup, the Washington Senators beat the Chicago White Sox, 7 to 5, the Senators moving to seventh place as the White Sox sank into the cellar.

The Philadelphia Phillies broke their nine game losing streak when Ray Benge held the Cubs to six hits, the Philas winning 4 to 2.

But the elderly Irishman could not follow up his advantage and at the finish he was a badly beaten boxer, clinging on against the final bell which ended the fight.

Great Soldier's Bed Speeding Motor Car

One black day in April, 1918, when the British army was fighting for its life 1 came upon a strange spectacle in the retreating flood of war wreckage that filled the roads leading westward from our crumbling front.

It was a shining limousine, all plate glass and upholstery, with a solitary occupant—a general officer of the type commonly known as a "Brass Hat." He was muffled in an overcoat, and he half sat, half reclined on the cushions, his head tilted against the padded back, altogether an incongruous picture of ease and contentment. The tired and hungry soldiers on the road looked at him with amazement, for he was asleep.

Few of them noticed the union jack on the top of the car, or realized that the only man who slept in all that traffic multitude was the "C. in C."—Sir Donald MacKenzie as he was then, or that he slept from sheer exhaustion because he had not slept since the German advance began. As he drove constantly from one headquarters to another behind the stricken line, he would snatch a few uneasy moments of slumber. It was his only chance.

This is my most vivid recollection of Lord Haig. During those critical days when, as he himself said, our men were fighting with their backs to the wall, he was constantly among them, and in places where no commander-in-chief need have been. He was a silent man, and shy, and by no means given to spectacular gestures of approval. Sir Percival Phillips in the Continental Edition of the London Daily Mail.

If You Have Been Skeptical of Five-cent Cigars

To the gentlemen of the smoke jury—to you men who have reached the decision that you just can't get a good smoke for five cents—we want to offer some new evidence. All we ask you to do is to try one more five-cent brand: Havana Robison. You're going to be surprised! At last, for the small sum of five cents you can get a cigar made entirely of ripe, long-filler tobacco. Never heard of such a thing? Maybe not. But it's a joyous reality now. Not a strand of bitter, raspy under-ripe nor a trace of insipid over-ripe tobacco usually found in low-priced cigars. Nor any short, loose ends to crumble in your mouth. No, sir, Havana Robison has the fragrance, mellow-mildness, rich flavor of fine tobacco at its best. Because every leaf is fully RIPE. Risk one nickel, men—at any nearby cigar counter. $35,000 Swimming Purse Is Not Claimed

FRENCH BAKER LAST TO GIVE UP IN WATER

"Have I Beaten the German?" Michel Asks—And Then Abandons Effort.

TORONTO, Ont., Sept. 6.—A purse of $35,000, which attracted 250 swimmers to Toronto for the Wrigley 15 mile swim marathon, lay unclaimed today—not one of the contestants being able to withstand the bitterly cold waters of Lake Ontario.

Georges Michel, the rotund French baker, showed the greatest endurance.

Hour after hour he overhauled his way through the choppy lake waters, which were estimated to have a temperature of 52 degrees. Shortly after 10 p. m. he turned to his managers with the question: "Have I beaten the German?" referring to Ernest Vierkotter, the prize winner last year.

He was advised that Vierkotter had to give up the race. Michel's arms sagged wearily and his stroke lost its cadence. At 10:17 p. m. he was pulled from the water, benumbed and apparently suffering. He had completed 12½ miles.

Today officials were uncertain what was to be done about the purse. They had announced that no prizes would be paid unless the actual 15 miles had been swum.

The race probably was the greatest swimming endurance test ever attempted in North America. There was a field of 250 on hand but reports that the water was about 62 degrees lowered this field until at the start there were only 199 to answer the gun. Among that crowd was one girl, Olive Gotterdam of Seattle, second prize winner in the girl's marathon a week ago.

Baseball

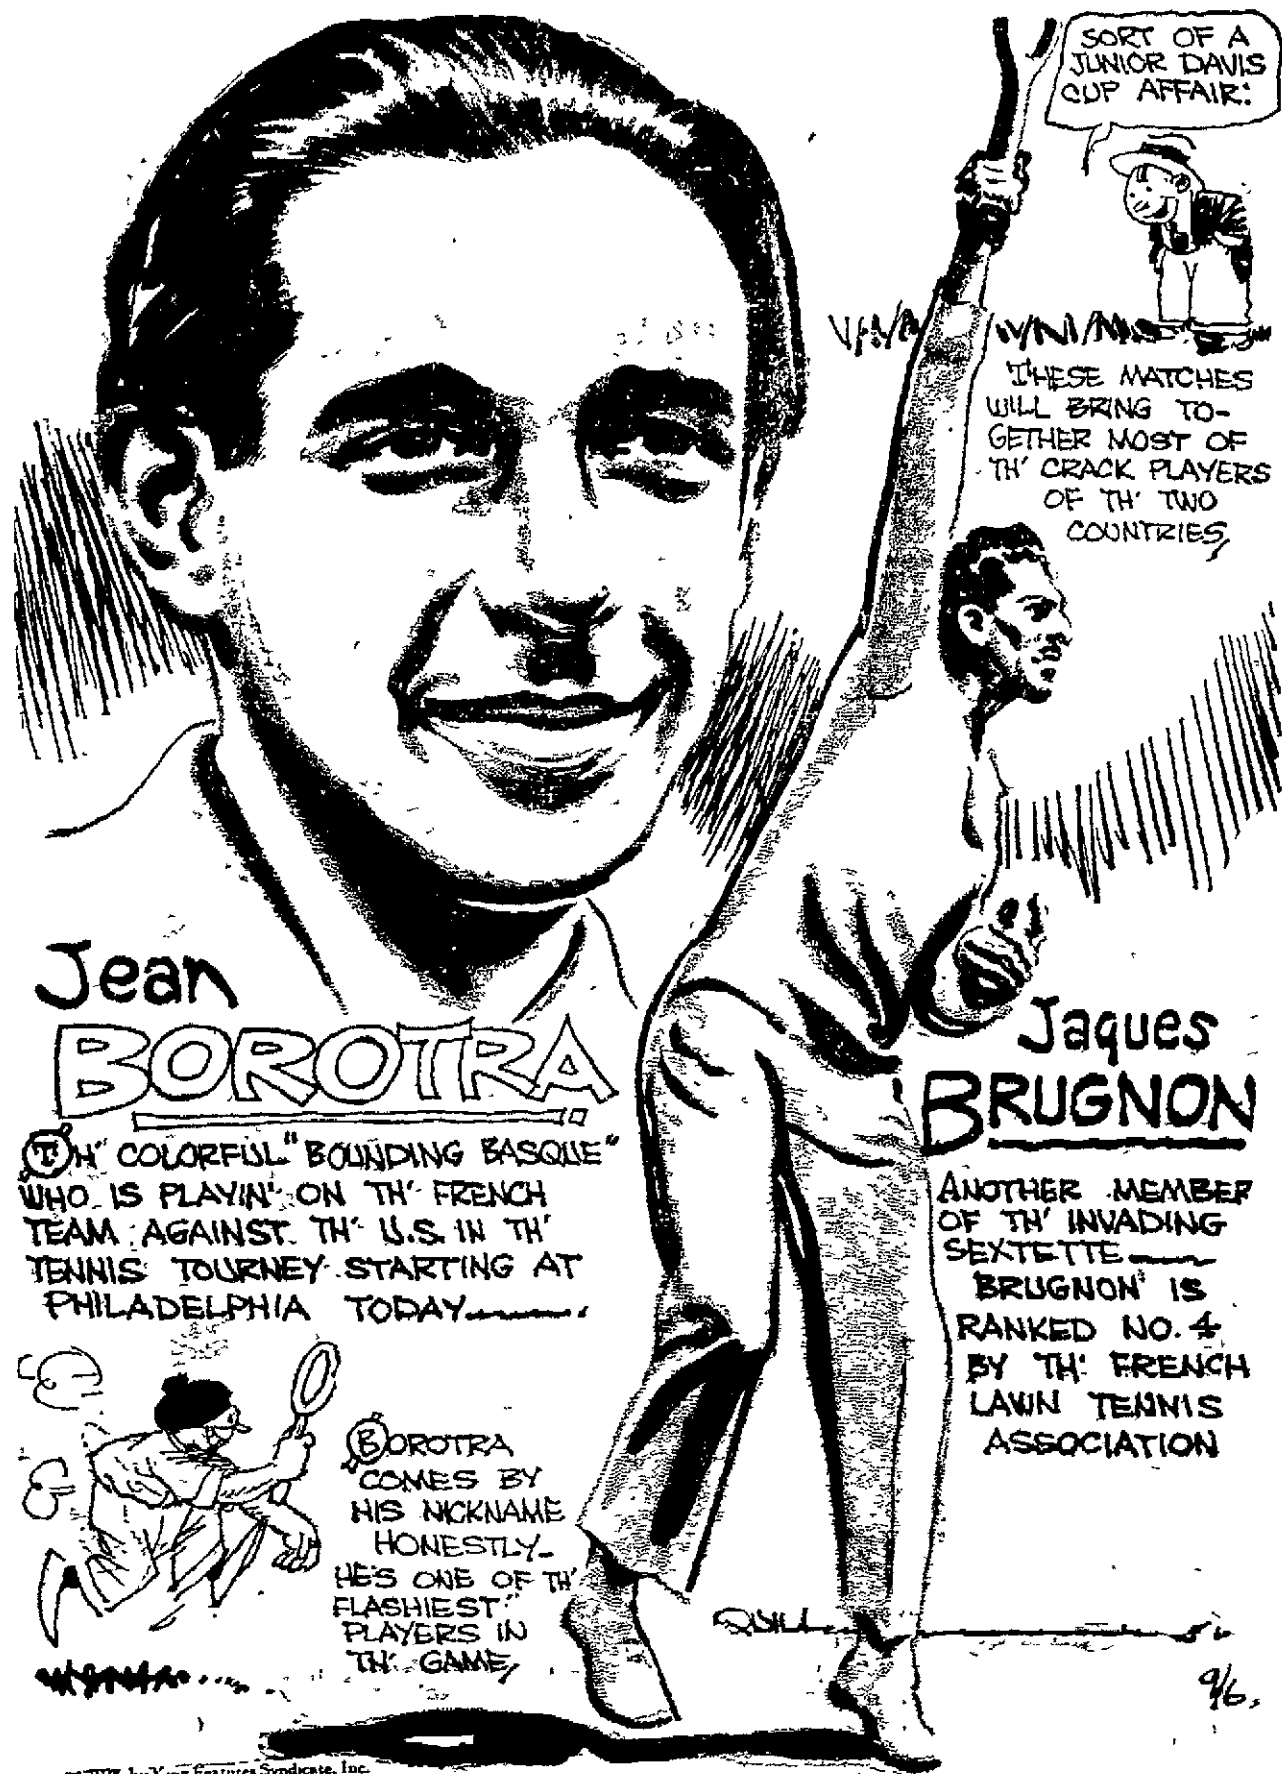

YESTERDAY'S HERO — Sad Sam Jones, Washington pitcher, who triumphed over the New York Yankees for the fourth time this season, allowing six hits and winning a 3 to 1 decision for the Washington Senators in the first game of a double-header. However, the Yankees came back behind the splendid pitching of Lefty Helms to win the nightcap 8 to 3 and maintain a two game lead over the Philadelphia Athletics, who were idle. The Yankees got to Burke in the first inning and continued the assault until he was relieved by Weaver in the fifth. Goslin's hard hitting was the feature of both games.

The New York Giants trounced the Philadelphia Phillies 14 to 3. Willoughby and Walsh were found for 22 hits, while Larry Benton allowed the Phillies only seven. Melvin Ott, New York outfielder, hit two home runs and was responsible for four of the Giants' scores. Klein, Philadelphia outfielder, hit his fourth home run in as many games.

The Detroit Tigers won the final game with the Chicago White Sox 10 to 2. Young Ed Walsh and George Cox were ineffective on the mound, allowing 14 safeties. Adkins and Blankenship hurled for the Tigers, allowing eight hits. Harry Heilmann was the hitting star of the game, getting three safeties in four times at bat.

Errors aided the Boston Braves in winning a double-header from the Brooklyn Robins 3 to 2 and 7 to 1. In the first game the Robins were guilty of eight errors. Bob Smith was on the mound in the second game and allowed the Robins two hits, both of which came in the fourth inning. Herman drove out a double and scored on a single by Flowers in this frame. J. Smith, Boston outfielder hit a home run in the seventh inning of the second game.

EMPIRE CLUB BOXING SHOW HERE TONIGHT

Eddie Townley and Kid Dayton Will Meet in Main Event.

The Empire Club is staging what promises to be one of the best outdoor boxing shows of the season at Mason's field tonight at 8:30.

In the main-go of six rounds Eddie Townley, Columbus, who carries a good record with him, will exchange blows with Kid Dayton, Circleville. Townley recently fought a draw with Tommy Gill at Indianola park, Columbus.

Kid Dayton has a good sleep producer in either list.

In the 6 round semi-final Chip Miller, Columbus, former Circleville boy meets K. O. Hill in return match. Boxing fans will remember that Hill lost the decision in the last bout with Miller but has had a lot of experience since that time. This bout should prove interesting as both boys are willing mixers. Hill is a game scrapper.

Gene Smith, Circleville, the "hit and grin" boy, meets Al Van Poesen, Circleville. Both have been in the local ring frequently, but not facing each other.

Slick Stanley, Chillicothe, meets Salty Toles, local colored welterweight, in four rounds.

Billy Beck and Battling Stoul, local talent, will furnish the curtain raiser.

John Rooney will referee.

Miss. Olgo Jones Speaks at Women's Club Banquet

The Business and Professional Women's club entertained the girls of the 1928 class of Circleville high school, at a banquet Thursday night. It was given at 6:30 o'clock in the Parish house of the Episcopal church where the 67 guests were seated with 12 at each table.

The flowers on the tables were beautiful rosebuds, and other garden flowers, and the guests found their places by the use of place cards decorated with gay summer blossoms. Candles were used to complete the color scheme. The souvenir at every plate was a dainty and unique nose gay, fashioned from varicolored candies. The stems were tied with scarlet and gray tulle, the class colors.

A short program followed the excellent dinner. Songs of welcome were sung by the club members to the graduates. Mrs. Mary Morris introduced Mrs. Louise D. Crawford who offered a toast to the girl graduate guests. To this, Miss Mabel Young, as president of the class, responded with an expression of gratitude from her class mates. She said they considered it an honor indeed to be entertained by the Women's club in this manner, and that it gave the girls one more opportunity to be together as a class. There were only a very few who were unable to attend.

Other numbers on the program were a whistling solo by Miss Mildred Barthelmas and a recitation by Miss Wilmine Haecker.

The principal speaker of the evening was Miss Olga Jones who has the distinction of having been the first woman member of the City Council of Columbus. Her splendid talk and its fine delivery were greatly enjoyed by both club members and their high school guests.

The speaker advised the graduates to set a goal for themselves and to always keep it in view. Among other thoughts, she admonished them to never lose sight of the big things of life, by paying too much attention to the details. She illustrated this with a story concerning the painting of "The Last Supper" by Leonardo da Vinci. The artist was not interested in what the table cloth lacked, but his entire artist's soul was put into the expression on the Master's face.

Miss Jones spoke of all these things to advise the girls not to become too concerned with the small things in life.

She told them that home, work and the community in which they live should always be of great importance to them. She also mentioned that three of the greatest essentials for a happy and prosperous life, were physical sturdiness, mental alertness and moral courage.

Including this splendid talk, and the other features of the program, this affair proved to be one of the most enjoyable of all the functions.

LIGHT UP-- FOR SAFETY

EMPTY SOCKETS ARE EXPENSIVE. Accidents happen in dark stairways, dishes are broken in dark pantries; clothes are torn in dark closets. Be sure you keep a supply of EDISON MAZDA Lamps on hand. Fill empty sockets with the right lamps and assure yourself plenty of light whenever you need it.

You'll find it convenient to buy EDISON MAZDA Lamps by the carton—they are always handy when sockets need refilling.
